STAT

1. I request permission to give an oral presentation at Yale University on 26 January 1983. I have been asked to participate on a panel organized by the Yale Alumni Association for the purpose of providing Yale undergraduates with information on careers in international government service and banking.

2. To the best of my knowledge none of the material presented is classified.

3. I look forward to this assignment. I know I can get across to the students a sense of the importance and challenge of government work, since my own career has included stints in the State Department, US Army, Library of Congress, and the Agency. As a former professor and director of Russian and East European Studies programs, I helped send many students to Washington. I am thus in a good position to answer student questions on the relationship between their training and government service.

4. I am not under cover. I will be identified at the session as an Analyst for CIA and will give the standard disclaimer indicating that the views expressed are my own and not necessarily those of the Agency.

Dear [Redacted]

STAT

I have been asked to organize a panel on the subject of "International Government Service and Banking" for the benefit of undergraduate students at Yale University. This panel is in a series sponsored by my Class of 1950 and Silliman College, one of the undergraduate residences.

I have spoken with my classmate, [Redacted] about appearing on a panel scheduled for the evening of Wednesday, January 26, 1983. The other panelists would be: [Redacted] Director of the Foreign Service Institute; [Redacted] Bankers Trust Company; and myself.

Briefing Notes:

I expect to have about 15-20 minutes for my remarks.

I should like to divide my talk into four parts speaking about 3 minutes on each of the first three topics and 10 minutes on the last. The topics include:

(1) The importance and challenge of government service. I should like to describe how non-governmental and governmental work are in many (though not all) respects complementary.

(2) The kind of education and interests most suitable for those who seek a government career.

(3) A brief survey of different types of opportunities available for governmental service in international affairs in Washington. Here I am going to limit myself to those not covered by the other speakers.

(4) Service in the CIA. My remarks will center on the important function which the Agency has in general, the strategic location of Washington, D.C. for those specializing in foreign affairs, and the challenge of work in the DDI.
